

CHAPTER 5

CONCLUSION

After analyzing the characteristics of Nisha's character, plot, and symbols in Veera Hiranandani's The Night Diary novel, I can find out who the child has his own perception of religious sentiments. In Nisha's case, she only had a negative perception of this incident. Nisha sees this incident as an unnecessary event. Because according to his perception, people do not need to care about religious issues, because humans are born with the religion he received because of their parents, and humans have never got the choice to choose their religion, so they can walk which religion we choose. Only most of them take for granted what they receive as inheritance.

Because they have already accepted, people often receive what they have received this is the right thing. This is supported by Dekart's theory, that Humans will always think of themselves as subjects, and make things other than themselves as objects. We can relate this to religious sentiments that still occur today in society. A religious group, will consider themselves a subject, and make other groups as objects. So from here it is our true religion that arises, and the other is wrong. Because all groups felt the same way, the inter-religious conflict began.

All of these things are considered by Nisha as something that is not important because Nisha was born to parents of different religions. He hopes that this religious sentiment will never occur. That way there is no need to fight, there is no need to kill, there is no need to partition, and they only need to live side by side enjoying the independence they have just achieved.
