

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

5.1. Conclusion

I find it that Newton Knight managed his needs and actualization itself by interacting and doing social activities. He also dedicated himself both as a civilian and farmer in the actualization of the community by dedicating his life to sharing with the human beings. Furthermore, human relations are always the need of human being to survive. Without the interaction and communication between human beings, there is no harmony to get a better life. In the search and fulfillment of Newton Knight in humanistic psychology, he emphasizes to success is a hard working tirelessly, always helping and always wants to learn about the minority group who happened unpleasant treatment. He always reminds of the importance of a belief, family support and good interaction among human beings, so that he can live a balanced life in a career, belief and community life.

I find that if you want to achieve your success, you must do what you want to do with work hard. Success cannot be obtained within a day, but it takes time and a very long process in achieving that success. This movie also has the moral teaching that I can prove in this research. First, we should have a sense of knowing people. Knowing people can drive our mindset to do something in our environment. We do not have to begin with the ego, even though we make mistakes, of course we will learn some things from that mistake. Second, we have to be more caring in every condition. No matter we are ready or not, we should prepare our self to face it. Newton Knight teaches us that being care is the point to collect our passion and let it out to prove that we can do something that people think impossible.
