

CHAPTER 5

CONCLUSION

Based on the previous chapter, the purpose of this research is to know the types of illocutionary acts and perlocutionary acts which were presented by all the characters in "Black Panther" movie through the script. In this research, I conclude that there are five types of illocutionary act in movie script, they are representatives, directives, expressives, commissives, and declaratives. Illocutionary acts and perlocutionary acts become main concern because illocutionary acts related to the speaker's intends and perlocutionary acts related to the effect of the utterance which is said by the speaker to the listener.

The characters in movie script use representative because there are a lot of statements, and the stories by the speakers, representative which commits the speaker to the truth of the expressed proposition. This act carries out a truth value. They express the speaker's belief in which it includes asserting, claiming, conducting, reporting, and stating.

The characters in movie script use a directive because is a kind of speech act that represents speaker's attempts to make the addressee to perform something in action. Advice, commands, orders, questions, and requests are the examples of this speech act. It leads to an extent the addressee will do as the result of the command they receive from the speaker. By producing an utterance containing this speech act, speaker will create a condition in which the addressee will do an action as the result of comprehending the intention carried out in the utterance.

The characters in movie script use expressive because is a kind of speech act which aims to express or to perform speaker's psychological attitude implied in the utterances such as joy, sorrow, like or dislike. The function of this category covers the area of thanking, blaming, congratulating, praising, and apologizing. Most of our daily conversation contains this speech act as it is aimed at delivering our thoughts upon something delivered to a stranger. Therefore, context is important for it provides knowledge to every utterance produced.

The last one the character use is a declarative, because this type of speech act serves function to create immediate change in some current state of affairs. Speakers perform their utterances to announce or to declare in order to make listeners accept to what has been delivered. It means declaring something, excommunicating, terminating, and nominating.

The result of the data, I have found 46 data that are included in the types of illocutionary act. First, 9 data are in representatives. 17 data are in directives. 11 data are in commissives. 7 data are in expressives. The last one is 2 data in declaratives.

After analyzing the data and concluding this research, I suggest future researchers are encouraged to conduct this analysis relating to the context that in daily conversation someone needs to understand the physical and social context to make a good analysis of speech acts better than mine. The writer hopes this research will be useful for the readers and the researcher to get better understanding about speech act, especially illocutionary act. The last, the writer hopes that this research will benefit for English Language and Culture student who wants to do the similar research.
