

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

4.1 Conclusion

In the previous chapter, the researcher has found the illocutionary and the perlocutionary acts that shown in the interview of Barack Obama, Michelle Obama as the interviewee and Jess Cagle and Sandra Sobieraj Westfall as the interviewers. The researcher analyzes illocutionary classification as directives, representatives, expressive, commissive, and declaration in every utterance. The writer also analyzes the perlocutionary act that is shown through the utterances by the interviewer participants.

Based on the analysis, I conclude that The Obamas has worked perfectly on every element in life such as on their work as leader, as parents, as daughter and son-in-law, and as public figure. During the interview, the Obamas answer all of the questions nicely and breathtakingly good. They look relaxed and serious at the same time by using good dictions and never give an irritating effect from their utterances.

On the other hand, the interviewer also gives an interesting but also difficult question at the same time. Starting from asking about the Girl's reaction and feeling when they move from White House, about the things had been happened on their lead, pointing on the current issues in America, the relation between Barack Obama and his mother-in-law, and etc.

The illocutionary acts are mostly counted as directive, expressive, and representative act of stating, questioning, inviting, expressing likes, asserting, convincing, and etc.

While on the perlocutionary act, the researcher finds many inspiring effects from the utterances spoken by the Obamas as they always say proper words even though it seems to be hard for them to answer the questions by the interviewer. Furthermore, they also perform an amusing effect during the interview as the researcher mentions before that they look relaxed to have this interview.

4.2 Summary of term paper

On chapter 2 consists of the theoretical framework that is used to analyze the data which contains theory of pragmatics, speech act, and other information such as the definition of Context, Meaning, Analysis, Interview, and several information about PeopleTv, and the Obamas.

On chapter 3, the researcher has written the analysis of illocutionary act, perlocutionary act, and the impact that comes up to The Obamas during the interview according to the interviewers' point of view.

On chapter 4, the researcher writes about the conclusion of the research. Including the researcher's thought about the interview, the interview participants, and also conclusion of each chapter of the research.

The researcher gets many lessons to be learned by seeing the way the Obamas talking. Seeing the way the Obamas replies to the question using polite and proper words that the researcher thinks that how we suppose to speak to everyone. Paying attention to the words that we want to say is needed in terms of having good communication. The researcher is inspired by the Obamas on how they handle every aspect of their lives that supposed to be a role model for everyone.

In addition, the researcher hopes this writing can be useful in terms of academic and also for the reader to know how we suppose to speak in achieving a successful of communication.
