

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

Conclusion

Variety exists in all languages and impossible for us to count the varieties itself even though only in one kind of language for example English. According to this term paper language is not only something that we use to communicate for people in society, and also with the unique features of the every language they can be an identity for them. The diversity of language or even in the dialects means that they have their own characteristics to their language, so if we do not understand about their language though it is in the same root but it does not mean that the language wrong. It just the code or the features of the language are different, they are only share the same knowledge in the similar society or groups.

The study of sociolinguistics, in this matter is used for us to know more the varieties in language and also to understand the language changing in society, it is because languages can be disappeared or changing and we are all as the user of the language can make an impact in this phenomena, we can change it, we can leave it and disappear and the choice is on us. Not only by the pronunciation but also the use of words and grammar pattern that mark their identity in language varieties.

Historical background can be distinguished as a support to analyze similar case of the language varieties, but also it should be learned with the present phenomenon as a comparison where the characteristics of language can be changed or even disappear. So, the study of sociolinguistics has so many interesting things because when we are dealing with it, we can analyze the language change easier.