

CHAPTER 5

CONCLUSION

After describing and analyzing the data findings presented in the previous chapter, in this chapter the author will produce the following conclusions from the film Raya and the Last Dragon:

In this film, we try to convey that the moral message we want to convey is in accordance with the social reality of division and social conflict caused by prejudice, hatred, greed and the desire for power. This film seems to want to convey the social reality of this phenomenon which is very closely related to human nature in everyday life. That humans always develop individuals to avoid pain and fulfill their basic needs, including that humans can carry out painful acts against other living creatures, including humans. As with any form of colonialism, apart from the expansion of power, all forms of colonialism are difficult to separate from the context of fulfilling basic human needs. However, on the other hand, trust is one of the human qualities that this film wants to convey. It is time for humans to introspect themselves and end hostilities to create peace on this earth.

This research focuses on animated films with the type of research being the entire scene who we got the values of :

- Morals in Human Relations with God

This indicator or one of the categorizations states that basically humans are religious, always in contact with the creator, so this is what is called humans must always be in contact with God.

Indicators of morals in humans' relationship with God are: Gratitude, Trust in God, Prayer, and Obedience to God.

• Morals in Human Relations with the Other

Basically, humans dedicate themselves as social creatures where individuals need other individuals in their lives. Humans are also individuals who yearn for desires physically and mentally, which is why they live side by side and establish friendship with other humans.

Indicators of morals in human relationships with other humans are: Love, Willing to sacrifice, Kinship, Caring, Deliberation, Mutual cooperation, and Help.

• Morals in Human Relations with Themselves

It can be interpreted that humans always want to be the best in their lives and believe in themselves without always having to depend on other people.

Indicators of the moral relationship between humans and themselves are: Fear, honesty, patience, death, longing, selfishness, hard work, learning, courage, ingenuity, self-esteem, pain, pride, doubt and disappointment.

The film Raya and the Last Dragon is not only entertaining to watch, but also provides inspiring moral messages, including:

1. The Importance of Unity

One of the main messages of this film is about the importance of unity.

Kumandra was originally divided into five tribes that competed with each other, but in the face of a major threat, they had to work together to save their world. This film teaches that when people unite and support each other, they can overcome the dangers that threaten.

2. Trust and Cooperation

Raya, the main hero, must learn to trust others and work together with her friends to achieve common goals. This film emphasizes that cooperation and trust are the keys to overcoming obstacles and achieving success.

3. Overcoming Prejudice and Conflict

The film Raya and The Last Dragon also teaches us how to overcome prejudice and conflict between tribes or groups. Raya must fight prejudice and distrust of people from other tribes to achieve peace and save Kumandra. This teaches us not to let differences divide us, but to find ways to reconcile and work together.

4. Wise Leadership

This film also depicts wise leadership through the characters of Raya and her father, Benja. They show that a true leader is someone who is brave, wise, and ready to sacrifice themselves for the greater good.

5. Courage and Perseverance

The characters in this film also illustrate the importance of courage and perseverance in facing challenges. They never give up despite facing great difficulties, and this inspires the audience to continue fighting for what they believe in. These messages can be applied in everyday life and become a guide to living life wisely.